Rosie Lopez

Professor Wingate

English 114B

April 21st, 2013

Quotations Sheet

The Quote:

The Explanation:

"Recent studies estimate that about one half to This shows that even though, yes, some three fourths of homeless adults have at least homeless adults are alcoholics, this may not be one ADM (mental) disorder: Between 12% and the main cause of their homelessness. This is 39% have an alcohol problem only, from 5% to because there are also homeless adults who do 40% are mentally ill without associated alcohol not suffer from this or other addictions, but or drug problems" (Fischer 1). however, are mentally ill. "Although psychiatric diagnosis is generally So even though the diagnosis is greatly accepted as the "gold standard," the psychiatric accepted among our society, it is difficult to examination procedure is difficult to test the homeless adults. Also because theses standardize; thus reliability may be reduced in examinations are costly and require plenty the absence of strict standards. Moreover, amount of time as well as cooperation these assessment by clinicians is expensive and time assessments are not usually used. Since there consuming and, constantly, not well-adapted to are no results, one is unable to identify if a large-scale population surveys. As a result, person is homeless because they are mentally clinical assessments are infrequently used" ill. This can lead to a person remaining (Fischer 2). homeless because they cannot help themselves.

been normalized in homeless populations and may lack applicability" (Fischer, 2).  "Not all persons with ADM problems seek typical." 2  "Homeless alcohol-dependent persons have substantially higher prevalence of other in their social and vocational functioning" in the outside world.  "There are some indicators that they may have had difficulties in childhood and adolescence" (Fischer 3).  "The dependent variables were created by factor analyzing the following reasons for homelessness identified by the study place of residence" (Fischer 3).  the homeless adult to realize if they have a mental illness and help themselves out of the streets.  This can lead to a homeless person to remain homeless because they are unable to understand that they have an illness.  This shows that alcohol-dependent persons are in a higher risk of becoming or remaining homeless because they are unable to function in the outside world.  This provides us with evidence that not all alcoholic homeless are in the streets because they simply have a drinking problem. Some might have a deeper reason to their alcoholism.  With the a person can conclude that a person does not choose to be homeless, but rather is placed in this position due to one or multiple hardships in their life such as those listed above.  place of residence" (Fischer 3).	"Standardized instruments have generally not	Therefore, there will be little corporation from streets.  "Not all persons with ADM problems seek help, and those who enter care may not be typical." 2  "Homeless alcohol-dependent persons have substantially higher prevalence of other in a higher risk of becoming or remaining homeless because they are unable to understand that they have an illness.  "This shows that alcohol-dependent persons are in a higher risk of becoming or remaining homeless because they are unable to function in their social and vocational functioning" in the outside world.  (Fischer 3)  "There are some indicators that they may have had difficulties in childhood and adolescence" alcoholic homeless are in the streets because they simply have a drinking problem. Some might have a deeper reason to their alcoholism.  "The dependent variables were created by factor analyzing the following reasons for does not choose to be homeless, but rather is placed in this position due to one or multiple hardships in their life such as those listed (unemployed) evicted or asked to leave last	been normalized in homeless populations and	the homeless adult to realize if they have a
"Not all persons with ADM problems seek help, and those who enter care may not be typical." 2 understand that they have an illness.  "Homeless alcohol-dependent persons have substantially higher prevalence of other psychiatric disorders and were more impaired in their social and vocational functioning" homeless because they are unable to function in their social and vocational functioning" homeless because they are unable to function in the outside world.  "There are some indicators that they may have had difficulties in childhood and adolescence" alcoholic homeless are in the streets because they simply have a drinking problem. Some might have a deeper reason to their alcoholism.  "The dependent variables were created by factor analyzing the following reasons for homelessness identified by the study participants: no money, no job hardships in their life such as those listed above.	may lack applicability" (Fischer, 2).	mental illness and help themselves out of the help, and those who enter care may not be typical." 2  "Homeless alcohol-dependent persons have substantially higher prevalence of other psychiatric disorders and were more impaired in their social and vocational functioning"  "There are some indicators that they may have had difficulties in childhood and adolescence" (Fischer 3).  "The dependent variables were created by factor analyzing the following reasons for homelessness identified by the study participants: no money, no job (understand that they are unable to understand that they have an illness.  This shows that alcohol-dependent persons are in a higher risk of becoming or remaining homeless because they are unable to function in the outside world.  This provides us with evidence that not all alcoholic homeless are in the streets because they simply have a drinking problem. Some might have a deeper reason to their alcoholism.  With the a person can conclude that a person does not choose to be homeless, but rather is placed in this position due to one or multiple hardships in their life such as those listed (unemployed)evicted or asked to leave last		streets.
typical." 2  "Homeless alcohol-dependent persons have substantially higher prevalence of other psychiatric disorders and were more impaired in their social and vocational functioning"  (Fischer 3)  "There are some indicators that they may have had difficulties in childhood and adolescence"  (Fischer 3).  "The dependent variables were created by factor analyzing the following reasons for homelessness identified by the study participants: no money, no job (unemployed)evicted or asked to leave last	"Not all persons with ADM problems seek	This can lead to a homeless person to remain
"Homeless alcohol-dependent persons have substantially higher prevalence of other in a higher risk of becoming or remaining homeless because they are unable to function in their social and vocational functioning" in the outside world.  (Fischer 3)  "There are some indicators that they may have had difficulties in childhood and adolescence" (Fischer 3).  "The dependent variables were created by factor analyzing the following reasons for homelessness identified by the study participants: no money, no job (unemployed)evicted or asked to leave last	help, and those who enter care may not be	homeless because they are unable to substantially higher prevalence of other psychiatric disorders and were more impaired in their social and vocational functioning"  (Fischer 3)  "There are some indicators that they may have had difficulties in childhood and adolescence"  (Fischer 3).  "The dependent variables were created by factor analyzing the following reasons for homelessness identified by the study participants: no money, no job (unemployed)evicted or asked to leave last in their life such as those listed (unemployed)evicted or asked to leave last in a higher risk of becoming or remaining homeless because they are unable to function in the outside world.  This provides us with evidence that not all alcoholic homeless are in the streets because they simply have a drinking problem. Some might have a deeper reason to their alcoholism.  With the a person can conclude that a person does not choose to be homeless, but rather is placed in this position due to one or multiple hardships in their life such as those listed above.	typical." 2	understand that they have an illness.
psychiatric disorders and were more impaired in their social and vocational functioning" in the outside world.  (Fischer 3)  "There are some indicators that they may have had difficulties in childhood and adolescence" alcoholic homeless are in the streets because they simply have a drinking problem. Some might have a deeper reason to their alcoholism.  "The dependent variables were created by factor analyzing the following reasons for homelessness identified by the study participants: no money, no job hardships in their life such as those listed (unemployed)evicted or asked to leave last	"Homeless alcohol-dependent persons have	This shows that alcohol-dependent persons are in their social and vocational functioning"  (Fischer 3)  "There are some indicators that they may have had difficulties in childhood and adolescence"  (Fischer 3).  "This provides us with evidence that not all alcoholic homeless are in the streets because they simply have a drinking problem. Some might have a deeper reason to their alcoholism.  "The dependent variables were created by does not choose to be homeless, but rather is homelessness identified by the study participants: no money, no job hardships in their life such as those listed (unemployed)evicted or asked to leave last alcoholic homeless are in the streets because they simply have a drinking problem. Some might have a deeper reason to their alcoholism.  With the a person can conclude that a person does not choose to be homeless, but rather is placed in this position due to one or multiple hardships in their life such as those listed above.	substantially higher prevalence of other	in a higher risk of becoming or remaining
"There are some indicators that they may have had difficulties in childhood and adolescence" alcoholic homeless are in the streets because they simply have a drinking problem. Some might have a deeper reason to their alcoholism.  "The dependent variables were created by factor analyzing the following reasons for homelessness identified by the study participants: no money, no job hardships in their life such as those listed above.	psychiatric disorders and were more impaired	homeless because they are unable to function
"There are some indicators that they may have had difficulties in childhood and adolescence" alcoholic homeless are in the streets because (Fischer 3). they simply have a drinking problem. Some might have a deeper reason to their alcoholism.  "The dependent variables were created by with the a person can conclude that a person does not choose to be homeless, but rather is homelessness identified by the study placed in this position due to one or multiple participants: no money, no job hardships in their life such as those listed (unemployed)evicted or asked to leave last	in their social and vocational functioning"	in the outside world.
had difficulties in childhood and adolescence" alcoholic homeless are in the streets because they simply have a drinking problem. Some might have a deeper reason to their alcoholism.  "The dependent variables were created by With the a person can conclude that a person factor analyzing the following reasons for does not choose to be homeless, but rather is homelessness identified by the study placed in this position due to one or multiple participants: no money, no job hardships in their life such as those listed (unemployed)evicted or asked to leave last alcoholic homeless are in the streets because they simply have a drinking problem. Some might have a deeper reason to their alcoholism.	(Fischer 3)
they simply have a drinking problem. Some might have a deeper reason to their alcoholism.  "The dependent variables were created by factor analyzing the following reasons for does not choose to be homeless, but rather is homelessness identified by the study placed in this position due to one or multiple participants: no money, no job hardships in their life such as those listed (unemployed)evicted or asked to leave last above.	"There are some indicators that they may have	This provides us with evidence that not all might have a deeper reason to their alcoholism.  "The dependent variables were created by factor analyzing the following reasons for homelessness identified by the study participants: no money, no job factor analyzing the following reasons for homelessness identified by the study participants: no money, no job factor analyzing the following reasons for homelessness identified by the study placed in this position due to one or multiple hardships in their life such as those listed factor analyzing the following reasons for homelessness identified by the study participants: no money, no job factor analyzing the following reasons for homelessness identified by the study placed in this position due to one or multiple hardships in their life such as those listed above.	had difficulties in childhood and adolescence"	alcoholic homeless are in the streets because
"The dependent variables were created by factor analyzing the following reasons for homelessness identified by the study participants: no money, no job  (unemployed)evicted or asked to leave last  With the a person can conclude that a person does not choose to be homeless, but rather is placed in this position due to one or multiple hardships in their life such as those listed above.	(Fischer 3).	they simply have a drinking problem. Some factor analyzing the following reasons for does not choose to be homeless, but rather is homelessness identified by the study placed in this position due to one or multiple participants: no money, no job hardships in their life such as those listed (unemployed)evicted or asked to leave last above.		might have a deeper reason to their alcoholism.
homelessness identified by the study participants: no money, no job hardships in their life such as those listed (unemployed)evicted or asked to leave last above.	"The dependent variables were created by	With the a person can conclude that a person
participants: no money, no job hardships in their life such as those listed (unemployed)evicted or asked to leave last above.	factor analyzing the following reasons for	does not choose to be homeless, but rather is (unemployed)evicted or asked to leave last above.	homelessness identified by the study	placed in this position due to one or multiple participants: no money, no job	hardships in their life such as those listed place of residence" (Fischer 3).	(unemployed)evicted or asked to leave last	above.
	place of residence" (Fischer 3).

"The more frequent a person has been homeless the more likely they are to report the following reasons: interpersonal-conflict, health problems, and social safety net failure" (Canadian Journal of Urban Research 3).

A person does not choose the difficult life of being homeless. This acutance is due to outside or inside factors that the person was unable to prevent during that time.

"Voy a ser uno de los "homeless." It did not seem right to him that a man who had loved to read, a man with Crimen y Castigo and El Idiota and the countless other works of real literature scattered on the floor of his apartment, would be called this ugly word" (Tobar 5).

Antonio, the protagonist in the novel The Tattooed Soldier, is ashamed to be considered homeless and just the thought and sound of this idea fills his body with embarrassment and disgust.

"But no, he could only blame himself for this fiasco, for having failed at the mathematics of his finances...But now Mr. Hwang was threatening to call the marshals, the police of eviction." (Tobar 5).

This provides us with the evidence that no one chooses to be homeless. It it's the outcome of stressful events that pulls a person into the darkness of homelessness. Eviction, the lack of financial funds and having nowhere else to go is a factor that can lead to homelessness.